I have services I authenticate with via Lamport's mostly forgotten scheme (S/KEY). And so on. There is a current fad of HTTP+JSON as a generic protocol substrate, but it's almost always a mediocre fit for the problem at hand. Go read the RFC archives, there's diamonds to be found. On the other hand, and perhaps even by the same token: using EC2 metadata isn't a completely terrible idea if it's ...

It is best to send multi-part emails using both text and HTML or text only. Sending HTML only email is not well received by ESPs. Also, remember that ESPs generally block images by default so HTML only will not look very good unless users are proactive about enabling images. There are a few tools available to test how your email will render across ESPs and browsers.
